

Disclaimer: None of the commercially-available literary works made available here or anywhere else by me, either this time or ever in the past or future, is intended for possession of anyone who doesn't have the original publication (hardcover/paperback) purchased at the publisher or the publisher's officially recognized agent. (I will remove the e-book as soon as I learn that the publisher sells their own e-book of the same title, author, and publishing year.) I am well aware of the benefits that I have received through the information in books, and therefore I would like to promote not only the reception of information, but also its authorship. There are authors and publishers of publications, who might expect financial revenue from their published literary works, and I fully respect their opinion and decision. Although I cannot encourage lay people to buy something, as a monk, I can encourage generosity and support. Appropriate support to the authors is necessary if further literary contributions are expected from them. If the authors are not supported by “their own will to donate” or by “their specific sponsors”, then the responsibility rests on the reader. Therefore, again, any commercially-available literary works made available by me - except those authored by me - are intended only for those who already possess them in the original hardcover form (unless the e-book is sold by the publisher). I never digitize “strictly copyrighted” works, i.e. those that contain the notification “No part of this book...stored in retrieval system...”, and I am not aware of a single illegal publication of such kind owned by me (I have already refused donations of several illegally distributed hardcovers of that kind). Nevertheless, I can't satisfy all critics, but at least I try to satisfy as many as I possibly can. Any literary work ever authored by me is entirely free from any copyright whatsoever and forever. Thank you for your kind forbearance and understanding. Monk Sarana.